Fulbright Specialist Award

Hank Hehmsoth, composer and jazz performing artist, at the Texas State University School of Music was selected for a Fulbright Specialists project in Santiago, Chile, at the Pro Jazz Professional Institute during the summer of 2013, according to the United States Department of State and the J. William Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board. He conducted master classes of contemporary American jazz in performance and theory, taught commercial arranging and composition for television and film, and held seminars on website development, publicity, and promotion with the goal to enrich the foreign student's skills and productivity with a solid approach to global distribution.

Hehmsoth is one of a distinguished group of U.S. professionals who will travel abroad this year through the Fulbright Specialists Program, created in 2000 to complement the traditional Fulbright Scholar Program, providing short-term academic opportunities to prominent U.S. professionals to support guest lectures, master classes, and performances at academic institutions around the world. He is the MacDowell Norton Stevens Fellow in Composition, a National Endowment for the Arts fellow in jazz composition. He was a member of the Austin-based Christopher Cross group, which won five GRAMMY© awards as well as an Academy Award© for best song.
